Some of the differences I noticed between the browsers mostly had to do with the spacing and page display. On both the Chrome and Edge browsers, some lines are going through the page, whereas when you look at the Firefox version of the browser, it doesn't appear. Firefox left a lot of the background pattern inside the browser, and the text appeared lighter on the edge browser. The line I was talking about previously doesn't appear on the index page, so there might be a problem with the way Chrome and Edge handled the contact page, causing lines that were not there. The navigation on all three of the pages looked the same, with no changes to the font or size.